$$ priorities reaffirmed

In response to the issues Faculty Senate Chair Rosie Joels raised in a recent letter to faculty members, President Trevor Colbourn reaffirmed the academic mission of UCF and announced deferral of special allocations in the following message to faculty:

To: UCF Faculty
From: Trevor Colbourn
Subject: University Budget Committee Actions

The concern generated by the recent University Budget Committee discussion about applying some $100,000 in E&G funds to expense items (undesignated) of the Department of Athletics deserves a direct reply. The University of Central Florida is first, foremost, and always an academic enterprise. My personal commitment is to make UCF the best possible institution of higher learning and to persuade the Board of Regents and the State of Florida to provide the resources needed to allow us to reach our full potential.

Incidentally, there is great enthusiasm for the progress made by the UCF Department of Athletics under Gene McDowell's leadership. His success has enabled us to reduce significantly the inherited basketball and football deficit and so build a fiscally sound program that we can regard with pride. He has improved the visibility of the University in a positive way, and he has enhanced our support from the Central Florida community.

The recent University Budget Committee discussions were just that—discussions. The primary obligation of the committee is to address University-wide needs and priorities within the limits of available resources. A number of well-justified special requests were advanced at the budget meeting, some of which were supported and some of which were rejected.

Any requests supported by the committee are submitted for my review and approval. Prior to any action, however, I will have to be assured that we have done everything possible to improve the allocations to the colleges and to meet the needs of our students. Given the academic needs currently anticipated for the spring term and the uncertainties of the recent tax legislation, I think it prudent to defer action on the expenditure of any allocated specials until January, 1988.

In any event, I will not approve the proposed special allocation for athletics. We will use our limited funds to support our primary missions of teaching, research, and service.

BOOK SALES

UCF Library will hold sales on surplus books three times during the fall semester, Oct. 13, Nov. 10 and Dec. 8. The dates are all Tuesdays and the sale hours are from 10 a.m. until 1 p.m. with the location the lobby of the main library. All books will cost 50 cents, unless otherwise marked.

Orlando educators warn of damage to schools if service tax is repealed

Public education in Central Florida will be incapable of dealing with current and future growth if the sales tax on services is repealed without replacement revenue from a source that will grow at the same rate, three of the area's top educators warned.

In an unprecedented joint news conference, held at Pershing Elementary School last Wednesday, Orange County Superintendent of Schools James Schott, University of Central Florida President Trevor Colbourn and Valencia Community College President Paul Gianini said that the Orange schools and the two post-secondary institutions would pay a price of at least $20-million in immediate cuts if the repeal movement succeeds and then fails to provide alternative funding.

The price is so high that it could not be handled without affecting the quality of instruction, the educational leaders said, spelling out the specific dollar impacts their operations would feel immediately. They said they favored retention of the service tax as the best means of protecting the state's investment in education in Central Florida.

"Florida is one of the most rapidly growing states in the nation and much of the growth is in Orange County. It is evident when you see enrollment figures," Schott said. "There are 3,900 additional students in the Orange County public school system this year. There are 17,000 students at UCF and 13,000 at VCC—both record enrollments," he added.

Schott predicted the three institutions will see between 5,000 and 7,000 new students during the course of the school year. "Growth requires additional instruc-

As the Legislature convened on Monday to consider repeal of the services tax, political talk centered on repealing the tax effective January 1, 1987. At the same time, figures were revised to reflect the cuts the State University System and each university would have to absorb. The estimate for UCF totaled $2.9-million for the six-months of the 1987-88 fiscal year. Accordingly, UCF would be denied some $5.8-million in revenue during fiscal 88-89 in the event of repeal.

THE EDUCATIONAL DOWNSIDE OF TAX REPEAL CONSEQUENCES AT UCF

The Board of Regents for the State University System calculates that repeal of the sales tax on services, without compensating revenues to replace those withdrawn, would require UCF to cut $4.1-million from its fiscal year budget, which began July 1, 1987. The cut would amount to 7.2 percent of the $56.6-million general revenue appropriation to UCF for 1987-88.

While no decisions have been reached as to how such a reduction might be accommodated, its size is far too significant to be absorbed without impairing the University of Central Florida's capacity to meet basic educational needs. The alternative could be a reduction in enrollment from the current 17,000 level to about 14,500. In terms of the University's current fiscal year budget, $4.1-million is equivalent to...

- the operating and equipment budgets (everything except salaries) for UCF's five Colleges of Arts & Sciences, Business Administration, Education, Engineering and Health.
- the entire annual faculty payroll of the College of Engineering.
- the College of Education's total budget (including salaries), with enough remaining to buy all of the scientific equipment the entire University plans to purchase this year.
- 87 percent of the total costs of running the 4,000-student College of Business Administration.
- The average annual pay of about one-quarter of UCF's full-time teaching faculty.
- Nearly 3-1/2 times the current annual allocation for purchasing books, journals and materials for the UCF Library.

tors, facilities and materials. In addition, our schools must deal with inflation and underfunded mandates," he said.

Commenting specifically about the Orange County Schools, Schott said the cut of $14-million is 68 percent of the new money allocated by the state to the school system's general fund for the year. "This is equivalent to 607 instructional positions or the total transportation budget plus $1.3-million in other services or 73 percent of the total supply budget for the year. The impact on our schools would be disastrous," said Schott.

Speaking about the consequences to UCF Colbourn said his institution would have to cut $4.1-million from this year's $56.6-million general revenue appropriation, or 7.2 percent of the total the state provides.

"The size of the cut UCF would have to absorb in the event of repeal without replacement would render our University incapable of meeting the needs as they now stand -- not just simply deferring improvements to meet future demand for educational services," he said. "Sadly, UCF's ascent to educational excellence would be stalled. The University, in fact, would hit a wind shear of such ferocity that a safe landing would be in doubt."

Colbourn said a cut of $4.1-million could conceivably require UCF to reduce student enrollment to some 14,500 students, 2,500 less than the current number. He also underscored the magnitude of the cut UCF faces by citing budgeted items equaling $4.1-million. The amount, he said, is equivalent to the fiscal year daily operating and equipment accounts for UCF's five Colleges of Arts and Sciences, Business Administration, Education, Engineering, Education and Health and equals the entire annual faculty payroll of the College of Engineering.

Addressing the effects on Valencia, Gianini said the college would be forced to slash almost $2-million out of the approximately $18.9-million it received from the state for the 1987-1988 academic year. "The impact of a repeal of the tax is an immediate and profound blow to the college."

Already Valencia has committed 95 percent of those funds, the loss of which, if not replaced, translates into a 14 percent cutback (or $220,000 per month).

"It becomes ominously clear that extracting such a significant amount from Valencia's current and future operating budgets can be devastating," Gianini

UCF hires director for safety, health

Hugh Ivie, safety director at the University of North Dakota for the past 14 years, joined UCF on Sep. 3 as director of environmental health and safety with the challenge to create a comprehensive, centralized safety program for the University.

His office has been established in Administration and Finance where he will report to Associate Vice President Joyce Clampitt. Advertising has been started for a technician to assist him. In recent months safety in the workplace has been handled by Bill Morris, operations analyst, and Don Lee, retired director of Physical Plant.

After a 20-year career in the Marine Corps, Ivie earned BS and MEd degrees in industrial technology at the University of Nebraska, expecting to go on for his PhD and a career teaching at the college level. The opportunity came to specialize in safety and work for his university and he made that career choice. He has since added postgraduate certification in radiation protection after completing a course at Oak Ridge Associated University.

Ron Atwell-- Veterans Affairs

By IRENE LeBLANC

What does a Director of Veterans Affairs have to do with drug abuse? Nothing, if Ron Atwell has his way. Ron lives in Mt. Dora. He cares about the youth in his community. He demonstrated that concern by helping coordinate a drug awareness program in the Lake County school district. This was Ron's first effort in this type of program, although he was active in Little League when his children were younger.

It took Ron and a team of volunteers four or five weeks to put the program together, coordinating with a group in Tampa/St. Pete called "Athletes for Christ."

The program was presented to three area high schools and two middle schools in the Mt. Dora, Tavares, Eustis area. Local Law enforcement officers were involved and attended each presentation, as did drug counselors from the area. Treatment centers set up tables and distributed brochures.

Even though there was no Public Relations budget, the program was well received. The idea was the child of a group of people from the local community, and local churches. Ron hopes to present the program again this Fall.

Learn to pay compliments. Start with the members of your family, and you will find it will become easier later in life to compliment others. It's a great asset.

To: All University Employees
From: Payroll Services
Subject: Deadline 1987 W-4 Cards

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 requires each employee to submit a new Form W-4 before Oct. 1, 1987. In order to meet the Oct. 1 deadline, the last day Payroll can submit W-4 forms to Tallahassee is Sept. 28. Pursuant to federal law, the state payroll system will automatically convert W-4 information of employees who have not filed an updated W-4 form by this deadline. This will result in withholding tax being computed for employees who claim marital status of single on their most recent W-4 on file with our office as being eligible for one exemption. Similarly, employees who claimed a marital status of married on their most recent W-4 on file with the state payroll office will have their withholding tax computed as though they have claimed two exemptions.

Questions regarding W-4 cards should be directed to Personnel for faculty and staff and to Financial Aid for student employees.

Subject: Faculty Assembly Meeting

As you know, the meeting of the UCF Faculty Assembly has been scheduled for Monday, Sept. 28 at 4 p.m. in the Health Physics Auditorium. I do hope you will be able to attend this meeting since it gives us an opportunity to discuss matters of general interest and concern to the entire University community.

I have prepared remarks about what we in Academic Affairs have identified as priorities for 1987-1988. They include matters relating to the University budget, to undergraduate teaching and to research development.

I look forward to sharing and discussing my thoughts with you. See you on Sept. 28.

Bunkie Horton closes 30-year career

It's a far cry from Mt. Pleasant, Florida to a director's chair at a state university. In time, not distance. Try 30 years, for example. Three decades. Not a long time, in relative terms; but a fair-size piece of a lifetime.

Looking back on Florida as it was 30 years ago, you'll find a far different place than the appendage hanging from Georgia and Alabama where the annual Tobacco Festival was big news, and teen-agers got their kicks with peanut boils, ice cream socials and square dancing.

That was the world that Bunkie Horton left in 1957 to embark on what would become a 30-year career with the state. A career that ends with her retirement next Wednesday as Director of Purchasing; the first woman to occupy that particular slot in the State University System.

The years that stretch from Gadsden County to UCF form a pattern of successively more responsible jobs that began as a clerk at the Board of Commissioners/State Institutions office in Chattahoochee. It was a great place to begin, she recalls. "It was the central purchasing office for all state hospitals, corrections facilities and child training centers, which means we had to learn all aspects of purchasing." It was here, under the tutelage of Dan D'Alemberte, whom she calls "the grandfather of purchasing for Florida," that she "absorbed it all like a sponge" and was prepared to move on in five years to the University of Florida.

The state's gain was the FBI's loss. Five years before, after graduating from high school in Quincy (the county seat) she had her heart set on a summer job with the Feds in Washington. When that dream failed to materialize, she applied for the Chattahoochee job. The rest, as they say, is history.

It's been 21 years since Gladys Charlene Horton arrived in Orlando, where she joined other charter staffers at the new university to continue the career that took her to the top. Those who can remember those early days also recall with fondness the closeness that was a natural spinoff. "We were close-knit, and in close quarters," she laughed. It was a great opportunity to see and learn what was going on in the other guy's territory, she added.

"There was no purchasing office as such, but with my background

I was put to work ordering equipment, preparing bids and opening them, putting decals on the equipment when we received it, and taking inventory." Every Friday afternoon, she inventoried the Coke machine!

"We were buying fast and furious" in the months before UCF took wing and moved that arose in purchasing she couldn't work out. "She is extremely loyal and dependable, and a credit to all state employees," he continued. "I guess I would say Bunkie is a Boy Scout of sorts; trustworthy, helpful, kind and all the rest of the attributes that go with them."

It's a far cry today from those first years in UCF history. Purchasing has evolved into a major operation. "We buy the tools for research, work with faculty on special projects, meet with officials from all walks of government, and maintain a whole range of day-to-day activities that touch just about every area of UCF," she reflected.

Looking back on 30 years, and ahead to new challenges, Bunkie strongly advocates purchasing as "a great field for woman. They seem to have a natural bent for the work, natural skills that can be put to use." As for the future, she's undecided. After an extended vacation in Georgia and the Carolinas, "enjoying sea shells, changing leaves, and watching waves," it will be back to Orlando and whatever lies ahead.

Incidentally, her nickname came from her father, who when the tyke was growing up in Mt. Pleasant, picked the name from a popular comic strip. It's been her private property ever since.

BUNKIE HORTON

from cramped downtown quarters to the campus abuilding in east Orange County. "The first time I drove to work at the campus, it was early in the morning. It was slightly foggy, and the library rose through the trees like a castle. I was impressed!"

Phil Goree, retired vice president for business affairs, who as the university's first business manager, hired Bunkie, in 1966, recalled there was rarely a situation

Let us then be up and doing
With a heart for every fate
Still achieving, still pursuing
Learn to labor and to wait.

Road closings — the long and the short of it

CEBA-II construction to close part of circle

A portion of Pegasus Circle will be closed to traffic on Oct. 1 in preparation for the building of CEBA-II, the College of Business Administration's portion of a grouping shared with the College of Engineering.

Pending completion of contract signing at the state level Aberthaw Construction Co. of Orlando is expected to start by Oct. 1 on the $8,071,726 construction. The job may keep the circle closed until May 15, 1989.

Jerry Osterhuis, University facilities planning director, said the winning bidder was $1 million under budget, even after all bid addenda were accepted. Those add-on options include built-in tables for case-rooms, swingaway chairs for the tables, a brick screen wall outside of the snack area and teaching restaurant, paver tile instead of carpet in designated areas, a vacuum system and ceramic wall tiles in designated toilet rooms.

CEBA-II will have a four-story section for the College of Business only. A two-story Joint Use section will connect CEBA-II to CEBA-I and provide a merging area for the two colleges.

United Way starts today on campus

Today marks the start of this year's United Way campaign on campus, where volunteers will be shooting for $21,000 in contributions from staff and faculty in support of dozens of community agencies in a three-county area.

The more than 30 persons from all areas of the University who will contact fellow employees for pledges or outright gifts over the next five weeks met last Wednesday for briefings and pep talks from local UW officials, the Walt Disney World campaign chairman, and President Colbourn.

In his remarks, Colbourn said the annual campaign is a way to show the community that support is a 2-way street. An increase in the percentage of University employees participating in the campaign would be welcome, he added.

Other speakers were Dick Clark, resource director for United Way of Orange, Seminole and Osceola, and Charles Luthin, vice president for finance, Walt Disney World.

Education gets added grant to develop teacher tests

The College of Education has been awarded an amendment to a previous grant, providing $295,000 for developing and validating 400 actual test items for each of seven initial teacher certification subject area tests.

Florida Department of Education early in the year gave five state universities portions of a $2.5 million grant to develop competency tests for teachers in 48 disciplines. UCF's share was $364,000 to prepare the tests in seven disciplines.

As a result of this amendment, the grant has been extended to Jan. 31, 1988. First tests developed from the grant will be administered by the Department of Education in October 1988.

Charles Dziuban, professor of Education (Tests and Measurement) and Michael Hynes, professor of Education (Math Education) are co-coordinators of the program and wrote the grant amendment.

UCF faculty members were selected as project managers and will continue to serve in this capacity. Computer Science is headed by Dr. Hynes; Economics by James Xander, associate professor of Business Administration; Geography by Arthur Olson, associate professor of Education; History by Nancy McGee, professor of Education; Political Science by Henry Kennedy, professor of Arts & Sciences; Social Sciences 9-12 by David Hernandez, professor of Education. Social Sciences 6-9 is headed by Delorys Blume, professor of Education and a recent addition to the project managers.

These project managers head teams of writers chosen statewide from members of their discipline who are currently working in the field. They were chosen after consulting with professional associations, school districts, universities and teachers' unions.

Internal review and pilot testing of the items are part of the process leading to actual compilation of subject area tests which will become a reality for teachers in Florida in October 1988. The completed project will be a landmark in the development of competent, professional teachers for the State of Florida.

Ex-administrator, Dr. Alan Fickett, named to PEPC

A charter UCF graduate and former key administrator at the university has been named as one of 12 members statewide on the Post-Secondary Education Planning Commission (PEPC).

Dr. Alan G. Fickett was serving as associate vice president for university relations and legislative liaison when he left to join an Orlando engineering firm in 1984 as marketing vice president.

He views his appointment to PEPC as an opportunity "to really get into issues" that affect post-secondary education statewide. "I'm absolutely delighted to be on the board and be able to contribute" to solving problems and reviewing policies, he added.

The PEPC, established seven years ago to advise the Cabinet - sitting as the State Board of Education - and the Legislature, is charged with periodic reviews of the state master plan for all public and private post-secondary schools, and reviews of major programs within the post-secondary system.

As an independent body, PEPC enjoys a great deal of credibility and is viewed as "very objective," said Fickett. "It takes a global view of issues, and its recommendations are listened to closely."

His initial assignment on the commission is as a member of a committee reviewing health education programs in the post-secondary system. Dr. Michael Butler, a local physician and member of the UCF Foundation board of directors, is committee chair.

Fickett graduated from UCF in 1971, went on to earn an MBA here, and was awarded his Ph.D. by Florida State University. He returned to the University as executive assistant to the president and later as associate director of the Central Florida Research Park before his appointment to the University Relations post.

He left in October 1984 for his present position with Dyer, Riddle Mills & Precourt, Inc.

said. "Like all community colleges in Florida, Valencia relies most heavily on its funding from the state. We cannot easily look to other private or local sources to make up the loss. Seventy-five percent of the college's operating budget comes from state funding. Less than a quarter of the costs to run the college are derived from student fees and we already were forced to raise student fees last year.

The potential loss of 10-1/2 percent of Valencia's funding hits the college at a time when it is struggling to maintain its commitment to excellence in the face of unprecedented growth. This fall, enrollment figures topped 13,000 for the first time in the college's 20 year history. That is an 11 percent increase over last year. "At a time when Florida's doors of opportunity are flung wide open, the traditionally 'open door' of its community college's may be slammed shut," said Gianini.
